FIRST WEEKS’ ASSIGNMENTS

Course Materials

Some thoughts on the Supplement (whether it is worth buying, and how you might save some money): I strongly recommend buying the supplement. Many students will find it helpful because the Federal Rules of Evidence were amended (“restyled”) as of Dec. 1, 2011, and the supplement illustrates all the changes (many important cases quote the old version of the rules, so seeing the changes can be useful). It also contains some important cases decided since the casebook was printed. Note, however, that much of the material in the 2017-2018 supplement also appears in the previous two versions (“2016-2017” and “2015-2016”). So an older edition of the supplement, if available used at a low price, might be sensible to buy, as long as you then track down a small amount of extra material on your own. Some material assigned for our first week is available only in the newest edition of the supplement.
The casebook and the 2017-2018 supplement should be available at the MU Bookstore, as well as from other retailers. In addition, I will place one copy of each book on reserve at the MU Law Library. Also, Chapter 1 of the casebook (which includes reading assignments through the middle of Class 5) is available on the course TWEN site (at no charge) as a PDF.

Class Assignments—Opening Weeks

For each and every assignment, please be sure to read the relevant section(s) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, as well as the advisory committee notes and legislative history. (When the casebook says “Focus on FRE 401,” for example, please read Rule 401 and its notes.) When an assignment refers to “Supp.,” the material is available in the statutory supplement. Students choosing not to buy a supplement are responsible for finding the material elsewhere.
