One Health Workforce-Next Generation

This project seeks to work through two university networks, AFROHUN and SEAOHUN (respectively, consortia based in Uganda and Thailand) to strengthen workforce capacities in Africa and Southeast Asia to prepare for, prevent, detect, and respond to public health emergencies of greatest concern, including infectious disease with an emphasis on zoonoses and antimicrobial resistance (AMR) health threats.

Role: Executive Board, Legal Consultant

Canadian Institutes of Health Research

Mar. 12, 2020 – Mar. 11, 2024

One Health Network for Global Governance of Infectious Diseases and Antimicrobial Resistance (Global IHN)

This project was funded (1) to develop a network of national and international actors to facilitate collaborative interactions among academics, industry, and policy communities; (2) to strengthen capacity for interdisciplinary research on, and the practice of, global governance on infectious diseases and anti-microbial resistance; (3) to enhance social sciences contributions to and engagement with One Health research approaches to improve global governance; and (4): to facilitate the implementation of a One Health approach to global governance of infectious diseases and anti-microbial resistance.

National Institutes of Health*Midwest Biomedical Accelerator Consortium: MBarC*

This project aims to promote biomedical technology commercialization by addressing the following barriers: 1) lack of awareness by researchers that commercialization is an option, 2) concerns that commercialization efforts delay academic advancement, and 3) failure to connect investigators with the collaborators and experts necessary to complete the commercialization process. This Research Evaluation and Commercialization Hub (REACH) establishes a partnership between the University of Missouri-Columbia (MU) and the University of Kansas Medical Center (KUMC) to facilitate translation of biomedical research into useful products.

Canada's response to Covid-19 in the context of the IHR(2005) and its opportunity to lead in global health security: a policy analysis

This project studies Canada's compliance of the International Health Regulations (IHR) and its role of supporting other countries' governance around IHR. The project will help coordinate the global response and inform decision making and planning at the national and international level.

Role: Investigator

World Health Organization

Jan. 21, 2019 – January 20, 2020

Evaluation of additional WHO support needed by National IHR Focal Points to fulfill their functions under the International Health Regulations (2005).

This project surveys National Focal Points in 28 low- and middle-income countries and assesses those NFPs for awareness, capacity, and technical support from the World Health Organization.

Positive Deviance Study of Outbreaks. This project, in contrast to “what went wrong approaches”, studies several well controlled highly infectious or high impact disease outbreaks. Some of these outbreaks required some international response but were considered well controlled. By reviewing ‘what went right’, especially in outbreaks controlled without large scale international assistance, it will inform guidance and prioritization of capacity building efforts toward approaches that have an immediate impact on countries ability to find, stop and prevent outbreaks.

Retrospective Case Studies on Data Sharing during Public Health Emergencies. This project examines practices related to data sharing in past infectious disease outbreaks, in order to better understand barriers and enablers to data sharing and how data shaped research responses to these outbreaks.
